Domestic violence is not personal, it's affecting your personnel

The term domestic violence infers a behavior that happens at home, however its impact has a profound effect on the workplace. With 1 in 4 women and 1 in 7 men experiencing domestic violence in their lifetime, it is essential for companies that view their employees as their most valuable asset to acknowledge that no workplace is immune. Productivity loss, on the job accidents, increases in absenteeism and tardiness, higher healthcare costs as well as heightened security risks impact the employee, their colleagues and your bottom line.

Join Partnership Against Domestic Violence for a breakfast conversation to learn more about the workplace impacts of domestic violence.
